Moved round by every breath That fortune or opinion blows. To-day, With gracious smile, my neighbor takes my hand, And talks of friendship, love and heaven; And one might think him kind and true of heart, Hating the thought of fickleness of soul; But meet him on the morrow, and observe How dark a change hath come--he is your fo-! That brow of light, Those smiles so bright, That generous hand, And voice so bland; That neighbor kind, Of tuneful mind; Your friend so live, Who thought of you So kindly on the yesterday, Now greets you like a thing of clay-- Instead of bidding you good morn, He passes with a look of scorn! Friendship! it is...
