Excerpt: . . . 11 There is obvious value in bringing the worlds attention to the problem, but we may have reached a tipping point when it comes to raising awareness on climate change. We have the worlds atten-tion; the question now is what were going to do about it. As the diverse subject matter of todays hearing suggests, climate change can have broad effects that we are only beginning to understand; but as I have continuously maintained, solutions to climate change are no less complex than the consequences. Our approach to combating climate change cannot be shortsighted. We need to reduce our greenhouse emissions, but we cannot do so in a way that jeop-ardizes our ability to meet our energy demands or cripples our economy. Our energy demands are rising, and running out of con-ventional power plants is a real threat. We need to find solutions like nuclear power that limit carbon emissions but also ensure that our energy needs will be met. Were also facing unprecedented economic challenges. As the challenges of competing in the global economy grow, rapidly devel-oping countries like China and India have made it clear that they will not hinder their economic growth to curb climate change. I heard that repeatedly in Kyoto and Buenos Aires and in the Neth-erlands. This means that any modest success that we enjoy at lim-iting our emissions will be completely offset by China and other na-tions. We cannot afford to stall our own economic development when other nations will not be similarly handicapped. Todays hearing, like the hearing we had last month, is focused on dire...
